Blood donations down

The regularly scheduled Bloodmobile visit on Monday of this week was "the lowest collection in the five year period since I have been associated with the Bloodmobile Services," said Mrs. Alice C. Martin, Blood Services Chairman.

"Our goal was 125 units of blood and we collected only 68 units," she said.

This visit had no first time donors, according to Martin. There are usually eight to 10 first time donors, she explained.

There were nine faithful repeat donors, and two of these received seven gallon pins. Bill Barnes and Leslie Nash.

Other donors receiving pins were Jean Notestein, five gallon pin; James L. Burcher, four gallon pin; Thomas D. Moore, three gallon pin; George Daniel Stratton, two gallon pin. Three received one gallon pins; they were Daniel P. Harvey, Jerry Yeatts and Margaret S. Hunter.

Good news for homemakers

All about oven canning

By SHIRLEY W. WALTON
Extension Agent

The oven canning method for the processing of home canned foods was recommended in the pre-1940's cookbooks. Occasionally some of our old methods are rediscovered by so called food "experts" as a simple way to home can foods. This method is unsafe since it does not fully preserve the food and may also result in jars exploding in the oven.

Those promoting the oven method claim that 6 to 12 hours at 250°F produces a safe product. In reality, the food product in the jar may never reach a temperature much higher than 215°F. According to a scientific panel on home canning of the Institute of Food Technologists.

The dry heat in the oven does not transfer to the food as quickly as wet heat does in a pressure canner. This is the same reason you can reach into a 350° oven and not get burned but cannot place your hands in 150° water. Because of the inadequate heat treatment received by foods during oven canning, there is a possibility of the survival of the deadly botulism bacteria, clostridium botulinum.

This bacterium produces one of the world's most deadly poison and ingesting that poison may cause death.

Another hazard of oven canning is exploding jars. If the liquid inside the jar goes above 212°F, which is boiling point, pressure may build up inside the jar and it breaks. In a pressure canner, there is pressure outside the jar, as well as inside, so that the pressures tend to equalize each other, minimizing the chance for breakage.

Finally, even if a safe product could be produced by oven canning, it would be totally unpalatable and the nutrients would be severely damaged. For example, a normal heat process in a pressure canner for pint jars of whole kernel corn is 55 minutes at 250°F. An equivalent heat process in the oven, if the corn reaches the maximum of 215°F, would take nearly 22 hours. This would produce a totally unacceptable product. I do not think we need to reach back in the 1940's and pull out old canning methods. Do you?

Home canning can be a safe, inexpensive method of preserving excess garden vegetables for year round enjoyment. While canning looks simple, a person must pay attention to every detail and follow the prescribed methods to have a safe product. The most important requirement is to follow the recommendations of time and temperature with a particular processing technique. Depend only on the recommendations which are issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, the manufacturer of your canning supplies or call our office for recommendations.

If you would like a free copy of an excellent booklet entitled "Preserving Foods," you may call 352-8244 or you may write us at P.O. Box 488, Appomattox, VA 24522. We shall be happy to send you one at no cost.

Don't be one of those "I've been doing it for years and it's never hurt me yet" crowd. Remember, it only takes one mistake to hurt yourself permanently or to cause a family member to become ill. Please follow recommended canning procedures in order to have nutritious, delicious products from your garden to enjoy next winter.

Have a good week!
